New york city real time traffic cameras

New Yorkers are not exactly known for being polite to tourists, but that's only because most tourists don't know how to act in the Big Apple. The good news: It's not that hard. Just follow these simple rules of conduct - from how to behave on the subway to when it's actually good to ask for help - and you'll mingle right on your next trip! Here's an inside scoop on what not to do in New York. (Photo: Thinkstock/Stock) It's rush hour on a hot summer's day, and a subway train pulls up to the station with each packed car except for one empty one. Assessment, right? Wrong- the chances that the train carriage is empty for a reason, whether it's broken air conditioning or spilled bodily fluid. Never go in an empty subway car... Trust me on that. (Photo: Thinkstock/Stock) It's rush hour on a hot summer's day, and a subway train pulls up to the station with each packed car except for one empty one. Assessment, right? Wrong- the chances that the train carriage is empty for a reason, whether it's broken air conditioning or spilled bodily fluid. Never go in an empty subway car... Trust me on that. (Photo: Thinkstock/Stock) Most city dwellers don't drive, so sidewalks are like streets, with the same type of road laws. Respect them and don't stop dead in the middle of the street to take pictures or consult your map. Instead, drag to the side so that pedestrian traffic doesn't hit you. (Photo: Thinkstock/Photodisk) New Yorkers can be rude to you if you get in their way, but they'll be nice if you politely ask them for help. Most locals pride themselves on their skills giving direction (it's a sign that they really know the city), so don't be afraid to stop and ask them which direction Fifth Avenue is or how to get to the city centre. Guest reviews are there, but you're not yet sure? (Photo: Wikimedia Commons via CC/Share Equally) Most New Yorkers go out of their way to escape Times Square - it's resounding, full of tourists and is thrown away by chain restaurants. If you came to experience the city, why would you eat in the same Red Lobster that you can eat back home? Live a little and patronize local restaurants instead of chains. (Photo: Thinkstock/Stock) New Yorkers are fast-walking professionals - they have places, and walking is the best way to get there quickly. It's clear that tourists want to walk slowly and take in the scenery, but please don't block the entire pavement by doing so. Run to the right in small groups and don't hold hands. You take the whole sidewalk and slow everyone behind you. (Photo: Commons via CC/Share Equally Attribution) Of course, Manhattan is what most people think when they think of New York, but it would be a shame to skip other areas when you visit. Four other neighborhoods (Brooklyn, Queens, Staten Island and the Bronx) have their own unique allies and are definitely worth a visit. Also they are easily accessible by metro (or Staten Island Ferry). Bonus: Restaurants and shopping shopping cheaper in outgoing areas than in Manhattan! (Photo: Thinkstock/Stock) Don't waste your money on an expensive boat cruise that runs past the Statue of Liberty. The room was quite big and comfortable. The trip takes about 50 minutes round trip and you can even purchase food and drink on board. Hold a place outside, buy cheap beer and get amazing views of the city! (Photo: Thinkstock/Hemera) The New York City subway can be crowded! Respect other travelers and move to the center of the subway car when you boarded the train. Don't skimp at the door for 10 stops, making it difficult for other people to get on and off. I promise that people will move and let you pass when it's your stop. (Photo: Thinkstock/Photodisk) Real estate is priced in New York, and this also applies to parking spaces. New York city has an amazing public transportation system of 24/7, so use it! Don't waste your time fighting traffic or finding parking spaces. Take a bus or subway, or hail a taxi instead. You save time and money and prevent exacerbation as well as you will get a better feel for the city once you feel like a local. You'll find elaborate light displays wherever you look, festive meals and drinks menus at restaurants, and themed activities every day of the week. While it's more crowded, it's also fun to be part of the holiday fun. Everyone is in a good mood and ready to make the most of the city. The weather is cold, but not as freezing as January and February. If good weather is your priority, then autumn is the best time to visit New York City. The weather is mild and the leaves are changing. Walking on the street turns into a walk in nature. July and August bring hot heat, even though the city is less crowded. In summer, guests can enjoy free outdoor activities, film and kayaking. Use this guide to determine what New York offers every month of the year. You will never run out of things to do no matter when you visit. New York city has a steady stream of special events and festivals. Is for everyone: design, food, music, theater, etc. V O V O is so great that you can find a variety of events taking place on the same day in different areas. For example, September is Labor Day weekend, fashion week on the west side of Manhattan and downtown and the United Nations General Assembly in Midtown East. If you want to avoid the crowd you can just head in the opposite direction. For a complete list of what's happening, check out the official New York City guide. The three-day weekend and other public holidays are a good time to visit New York City as locals leave and the city has more room for visitors. It's often easier to find an order at a popular restaurant, and the subway voids. New York Summer is hot and humid with temperatures reaching 90 degrees. Much of the city is covered with pavement that absorbs heat, making it feel still muggier. There are public pools and boating options, both great ways to cool down. Many locals believe the fall is the most beautiful time to visit New York City. The leaves change color and fall outside, making the city feel more naturally beautiful. Central Park is a great place to head during autumn; you will see plants of every color. Winter can be very cold in New York City with average temperatures ranging from the 40s as high and 20s as low. When it snows, the streets are covered with piles of slush, making it difficult to walk. Waterproof boots at this time of year are essential. The flip side of New York bars and restaurants really know how to get cozy. You will find fireplaces burning in many places. In the spring, the city comes to life. Flowers bloom on every street and in the city there are many festivals, including the Cherry Blossom Festival in Brooklyn, which is officially called Sakura Matsuri. Temperatures soar into the 50s and 60s, making it enjoyable to walk around and see the sights. January is the coldest month in New York, but also the cheapest. While holiday lights are still up, there are bargains inside most stores after the holiday season has passed. Hotels are also cheaper, which means you'll have a great place to stay while you explore these events: Winter Jazzfest: The best musicians in the world come to New York and play more than 100 sets in a variety of venues, including speakeasy bars, churches and iconic concert halls. New York Must-See Week: To lure New Yorkers outdoors every January the city's best attractions, museums, tours, and theaters offer two-on-one admissions in one week alone. Lunar New Year's Eve parade and festival. Across New York, Chinese communities celebrate their New Year with dancing dragons, martial artists and colorful parades. The best places to head are Chinatown, Flushing, Queens, and Sunset Park. However, it's important to note that The Lunar New Year sometimes falls on January. New York Fashion Week (autumn/winter). If you've always wanted to watch models in elaborate catwalk walking designs here your chance. In addition to the main event, smaller pop-up parties and runways are taking place across the city. New York Off-Broadway Week: This Month is a chance for off-Broadway stars to shine. For one week each year, productions offer two tickets for one to their jaw-dropping spectacles. March tends to warm up, making the city alive with activity. It just might be rainy, however, so pack your sturdy umbrella to fight the wind and rain while you enjoy these events: St. Patrick's Day Parade: This parade, which marches Fifth Avenue, was first held in 1762. Organized by the Archbishop of New York, it is still going strong. Dress in green and prepare for Irish music, dancing and other Celtic traditions. Macy's Flower Show: What better way to celebrate the arrival of spring than to go to Macy's annual flower show. Throughout the department store you will see impressive displays made entirely of exotic and colorful flowers. Big East tournament: Ten schools head to Madison Square Garden to fight for the Great Eastern Men's Basketball Championship. It's really March madness at this annual sporting event. April is the month when spring finally hits New York. Everyone outside enjoys the sun and blossoming flowers, but be sure to pack a jacket as it can still be a bit cold. Events you should check out this month include the following: Mets and Yankees Season Openers: Challenge all baseball fans! April is when the Mets and Yankees open their seasons in their iconic stadiums. New York city makes it easy to reach them both by public transportation, so leave the car at home. Tribeca Film Festival: The Robert De Niro Film Festival is one of the best in the world. Actors from all over the world are heading to this beautiful neighborhood to debut their latest work. Get ready for many celebrity attractions: Cherry Blossom Festival: A walk among the 220 cherry trees of the Brooklyn Botanic Garden can feel like a dream with pink, fluffy flowers everywhere. The whole family will love concerts, dance performances and other cultural holidays. Many New Yorkers say May is perfect for enjoying the whole city has to offer. The sun is out, the weather is warm and it's until summer, so the crowds haven't come down on the town yet. That means you'll have plenty of room to enjoy these big events: the TD Five Boro Bike Tour: In one day New York City closes its main streets to 32,000 from all over the world could travel to all five districts, taking in the best views of the city. City. Early to participate or just head towards the route to have fun with riders. Frieze New York: For this art festival, Randall Island is transformed into artist heaven. An outdoor sculpture park is being created and a tent full of masterpieces has been installed on the green space. May is the start of many programs that last throughout the summer. Highlights include SummerStage, a free series performance in Central Park, and Summer on the Hudson, a festival that brings wellness events, movies, children's shows, kites, concerts and other fun activities to Riverside Park. In June, summer officially arrived in the city, but not too hot. Many festivals bring people outdoors to the sun, as do special events that take place around the city: The Museum Mile Festival: Within days, the country's best museums located in the Upper East Side (including the Metropolitan Museum of Art) open their doors to the public for free. On the street there is a full-fledged block party with food, music, and many activities for children. Big Apple Barbecue Block Party: The country's best barbecue chefs take over New York's Madison Square Park and cook their meals outside. Live music and lots of beer are also available. Pride Week: Every year the city celebrates its gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgender communities with a festival just for them. It culminates with a parade at the site of the Stonewall Riots 1969 NY Philharmonic concerts in parks: pack a picnic, grab a blanket, and enjoy some of the city's greatest music under the stars. The New York Philharmonic does a free concert in all five neighborhoods, including Van Cortlandt Park in the Bronx and the Great Lawn in Central Park. July will be hot, but you can get your mind off the heat with fun activities and programs. From celebrating the birth of the United States to Broadway shows in public parks, there are plenty of big events worth opening in July: Macy's Fourth of July Fireworks: There's no better place to be on the Fourth of July than New York. The best fireworks show in town is the Macy's fourth of July fireworks display. You can even see them surround the Statue of Liberty. Broadway at Bryant Park: Why see a Broadway show at an indoor theater in the summer when you can head to the park? Set up a picnic at lunchtime in Bryant Park and watch the stars entertain you for an hour. Summer at Lincoln Center: New York's legendary music establishment invites its greatest artists to entertain you under the stars. One night there is a swing dance party. Next, a family show or Mozart concerto. While most locals head to the nearest beach in August, you'll have the city all to yourself most of the month. However, while the concrete jungle will be oppressively hot, sticking may just be worthwhile for these events: Summer streets: On three Saturdays of August, sections of Park Avenue are closed to traffic so walkers and bikers can have all the lanes to it's an amazing feat to be able to travel through one of the city's biggest streets without any cars getting in your way. US Open Tennis (through September): Tennis has four grand slams each year and the final one at Flushing Meadows Corona Park in Queens. Tickets for early August matches allow you to stroll through the stadium, watching smaller matches on the side courts. You may discover the next big star. In September, everyone in New York returned to work and school, but the city is still buzzing with activity. The weather is also chilling, making it enjoyable once again to be outdoors for these big events: New York Fashion Week (spring/summer): New York Fashion Week returns with designers showcasing their spring and summer collections. Celebrities from other industries including film and sports also make an appearance on these shows. Fashion parties continue all night. Commemoration 9/11: every day on September 11, the city remembers the victims of the World Trade Center attacks. It's a solemn day, but an important one. Religious groups hold events to pray for peace, and the Freedom Tower lights up around the city. October is the heart of autumn, and New Yorkers are enjoying changing leaf colors in parks across the city. October is the heart of autumn, and New Yorkers are enjoying changing leaf colors in parks across the city. From the New York Festival to Oktoberfest and Halloween celebrations, there are also plenty of fun activities and festivals for locals and visitors to enjoy this month. Open House New York: This design festival lets you go behind the scenes of the city's largest buildings, which are usually closed to the public. You can tour private brownstones in Brooklyn and see the mechanics of huge skyscrapers. Sign up early to get a seat. New Yorker Festival: This three-day festival is all about enriching the mind. Leaders in politics, journalism, the arts, the media and more hold panels and lectures to teach you something you didn't know. Rangers and Islanders Openers: New York loves its two hockey teams, and October is the start of the season. Get a ticket to an early game where athletes are fresh and ready to rumble. Village Halloween Parade: One of the biggest parades in New York City, this event brings thousands of people to Greenwich Village. The streets are replete with elaborate costumes, huge dolls, bands and parties. It's overblown, but it's part of the fun. Oktoberfest: New Yorkers love the occasion for the party, and they go out to this German celebration. In establishments around the city you will find huge mandelais, lederhosen and pints of beer. During November, the days are shorter and colder, but New Yorkers have focused on preparing for Thanksgiving and evaluating everything they should be grateful for. You will also find a number of major events such as marathons and parades in the city this month. TCS New York City Marathon: Half one of the biggest days of the year, all in New York rallies around the marathon. You'll find spectators cheering for strangers on every mile. In some viewing locations loudspeakers bang loud music and sellers serve as a treat. New York Comedy Festival: Comedians from around the world travel to New York for this festival. It is there that they will disse their last material and break the audience with impromptu nights. There are both small, intimate shows in bars and large-scale events in arenas. Macy's Thanksgiving Day Parade: Thanksgiving won't be the same without Macy's annual Thanksgiving day parade. Thousands of spectators wake up early to see their favorite balloons and floats travel through the streets of New York City. Don't miss seeing the balloons detonated the night before. December is all about the winter holidays in New York. Each street is lit up with creative light displays, and shops go outside to greet busy shoppers. It may be cold, but the air is crisp and full of promise of snow. Check out these great activities to get you in the festive spirit: Holiday shopping: In four iconic locations in New York City (Union Square, Grand Central Terminal, Bryant Park, and Columbus Circle) local artists and merchants are going to sell gifts for the holidays. Buy hot apple cider and walk to see the goodies on display. Also head to Fifth Avenue to see the famous department store windows on Saks Fifth Avenue and Bergdorf Goodman. Times Square New Year's Eve: Millions of people from around the world tune into Times Square to watch the famous fall of a crystal ball at midnight. Seeing him on television is special, watching it personally is a once in a lifetime experience. Join people from all over the world to bring in the new year. Just don't forget to kiss at midnight! New York Road Runners Midnight Run: If crowds and parties are not your stuff, head to Central Park to race through Central Park at midnight. Runners wear costumes and wear holiday accessories such as horns and confetti. Thank you for let us know! Know!
